About AYUSH:
AYUSH is an acronym for Ayurveda, Yoga and Naturopathy, Unani, Siddha and Homeopathy and are the six Indian systems of medicine prevalent and practiced in India and some of the neighbouring Asian countries with very few exceptions in some of the developed countries. A department called the department of Indian system of medicine was created in March 1995 and renamed to AYUSH in November 2003 with a focus to provide increased attention for the development of these systems. This was felt in order to give increased attention to these systems in the presence of a strong counterpart in the form of allopathic system of medicine which led to an "architectural correction" in the health service envisaged by National Rural Health Mission (NRHM). Before the initiation of NRHM most of these systems including workforces, therapeutics and principles were limited to their own field with few exceptions in some states, as health in India is a state issue. This took a reverse turn after the initiation of NRHM and the AYUSH systems were brought into the mainstream health care. NRHM came into play in 2005 but implemented at ground level in 2006 and introduced the concept of "mainstreaming of AYUSH and revitalization of local health traditions" to strengthen public health services. This concept helped in utilizing the untapped AYUSH workforce, therapeutics and the principles for the management of community health problems at different levels.
